She Dabbles in is an inclusive platform that values honesty, love, and tolerance. We strive to cultivate a space where reasoned voices can be heard without fear of judgment or shame.

Currently, there are many unknowns when it comes to women's issues and during these challenging times your voice and your story matter most. We want to help you use your voice to amplify what's at stake for women everywhere.

However, we know writing can be hard and uncomfortable at times, but we're here to help! When writing for She Dabbles in, the only requirement is to be yourself. Don't worry about grammar, typos or length, just let your authentic voice come through on paper. We will never judge—only assist in helping you make your blog exactly what you want it to be.

Below are some tips that can help you get your story started. Also, never hesitate to ask questions or reach out for help.

Use the inspiration as it comes to you

More times than not, the pieces we loved the most were the ones we weren't planning on writing. Inspiration might just hit while walking to work or listening to a song. When that moment happens, grab a pen and pad, or your notes app on your phone, and start writing!

Don't force a story for the sake of frequency or timeliness, but do be ready for when that inspirational moment hits.

Try free writing

Put pen to paper without thinking twice! Just sit down and start writing and pass no judgment. Just write what comes to you and edit later.

Write the ending first

A lot of the time we know how we want a story to end before we know how it should begin. So start from what you know, the end, and work your way backward.

Love yourself and what you write

We aren't trying to win a Pulitzer Prize and we certainly aren't comparing or rating stories. Everyone's stories and voices are unique and that's what we're here to celebrate. So you do you!
